Taking up the French attitude toward the Russian Bolshevik delegates at the Genca meeting. Poincare said the first rendition to be imposed upon them was absolute recognition of the Russian pre-war debt, so large a share of which was due to French peasants, and the testitution by the Reds of the French property in Russia that had been pillaged or confiscated by the Bolsheviki. He said that in the light of the growing trade between Russia and other countries, France could not stand entirely aside, but would not join in any exploitation scheme. As a prerequisite to any negotiations, he said, France would demand that the Russians give adequate guaranties of their good faith, because such guaranties were necessry to protect not only the Allies but the Russian people themselves. Promises must be made, he added, before any papers would be signed or commerce resumed.

The conditions mentioned by Poincare as necessary to any dealings between France and Russia sounded much like the conditions set forth by Secretary of State Hugher last year as the terms on which the United States was ready to resume relations with the Mostow government.

The Chamber of Deputies' reception of the Premier's declarations was so enthusiastic that so far as French confidence in their leader is concerned Peincare could give his benediction to the French conference delegates tomorrow. If Premier Lloyd George gets anywhere near as clear an indorsement of his policies when he addresses the House of Commons in London Monday the Allies will go to Genea with a whited front, ready to co-operate on a plan for European reconstruction.

Much of the debate in the Chamber centered around the head of Aristide Briand, who was Premier during the Washington conference. The negotiations there and the resultant treaties (Centinued on eage five)

Stormy Career Is Ended

Three Major Tragedies Put

Short and Eventful Reign.

Charles, the last of the Hapsburgs to reign, was on the throne for less than two years. His predecessor, Francis Joseph, had been a monarch for sixty-seven years. Thus, with the longest and one of the shortest reigns in the history of the Hapsburg dynasty ended the line that for more than 800 years had exercised unbroken sovereignty as Roman emperors, German kings, emperors of Austria, kings of Hungary, Bohemia and Spain and what not other dignitaries. Yet it was a line which could boast of not more than two sovereigns of the first rank—Charles V and Maria Theresa.

The man who has just died had little thought in early years of ever coming

The man who has just died had little thought in early years of ever coming to the dual throne, and it was only through a series of three major tragedies that he was exalted to that unenviable eminence. He was descended from Maria Theresa through her second son, Emperor Leopold II; the cldest of Leopold's ten sons, Emperor Francis II—these were emperors of Rome, Francis II being the last of that line—and Francis's second son, Francis Rome, Francis II being the last of that line—and Francis's second son, Francis Charles. The last named archduke was a brother of Ferdinand, first Emperor of Austria, who was childless. Francis Charles had four sons, of whom the eldest was Francis Joseph, Emperor of Austria; the second was Maximilian, the "Emperor of Mexico," and the third was Charles Louis, who had three sons. became known left their tables and thronged the streets. The cafes also were deserted. Many persons broke into tears as word of the death of the former monarch was passed about.

The general helief prevails in monarchial circles that the passing of the former ruler will serve to consolidate the various factions, throwing together the outright Carlists and legitimists in support of Francis Joseph Otto. It is felt that these adherents of Charles will rally round his eldest sor and throw their efforts against the Friedrich party and the so-called electives.

Sentimental sympathy prevails for former Empress Zita because of her approaching accouchement. She is not, however, regarded as a political factor, inasmuch as the law of the house of Hapsburg gives her no legal rights, while the fact that she is of alien blood places her below the youngest prince of the blood.
